Tally ERP 9 free download is essential for you to generate sales orders, receipts, . By Jeff Duncan, KSL.com | Updated - Jul. 6, 2019 at 8:47 a.m. SALT LAKE CITY — Utah Republican Sen. Mike Lee said he has not taken a position on the presidential impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump, but the head of the Utah LDS Church has backed the probe. Bishop Gérald Caussé said the church supports the investigation and has encouraged its members to be informed about it. "The current inquiry by the House has been started. It will end up in the Senate. We have to learn and understand the process. We will soon decide on the course to follow. It is our duty as Christians, as faithful citizens, to know and understand what is taking place," Caussé said. "We have to call on the conscience of our citizens to make sure they have knowledge and information on this question of ethics and the morality of our government." Caussé's comments come as the LDS church has increased its focus on social media and information. It was the first time LDS Church leaders have commented on the impeachment inquiry. The official church position has not changed since 1998, when church members were asked if the church should oppose an impeachment of then-President Bill Clinton. Caussé specifically cited the 2018 presidential election, the passage of the Utah Equal Rights Amendment and recent presidential immigration policies. The LDS church teaches the principles of being compassionate, kind and merciful, but does not take political sides in elections. LDS Church spokesman Eric Hawkins said the church has provided "primarily religious education and connection" on other issues that have involved its members, like supporting the Boy Scouts of America and discouraging alcohol consumption.
