With the addition of the Air Command toolbar, adding airbrushed effects is even more straightforward; you can choose from a variety of new, non-destructive filters and easily scale one effect to the entire photo. This new crop tool is touch-friendly and lets you zoom and rotate to take an even more satisfying photo. And a new panel gives you convenient access to your photo's metadata, including color modes, resolution, and focal length. New to Photoshop CC 2023 are new features for the Actions panel, our new Brush engine, new and expanded features for the Filters panel, and a new color-autoplay button. The Action and Filter panels, along with the Layer panel, allow you to assign and manage multiple actions or filters to a specific layer. You can then open and work on filters as if applied to a layer; duplicate or remove actions; or reconfigure the actions or filters for each layer individually. New tools added to the Lens Blur Filters panel let you create lens-style blur effects with a semitransparent overlay, adding a distinctive look to your images without burning into them. You can now apply a layout template to All Layers (Ctrl/Cmd + Shift + Alt/Win + Alt + Shift) to duplicate, apply, or replace content across different layers, which was previously only possible through a separate Layer Merge tool. New features in the HDR style panel now let you choose how to process your images and create a new master from your adjustments. You can also reshape the rendered image, as well as preview and examine the image in the new image editor.

One thing I really like about Apple's Final Cut is its ability to make the files I've created while working on Lightroom into templates I can use on my system. While Photoshop has a template feature that is a lot of work to keep going. My plan is to buy a final cut template and tweak it a bit as I see fit until we need to do another wedding or event. For another story I was going to create a still with the image I'd made inside Photoshop and then add it to this story. I created a rectangle area, made a duplicate and changed the area to adjust it so that it was a small clip of the original photo (and not a just a copy). I could then drop onto this video sequence and it overlapped it perfectly. This is great for meta-text, text that talks about the story, image, etc. I like the look of it but I prefer when it doesn't interfere with the scene.
